BUFFALO EVENING

At Luncheon in Honor of 'Wild Bill' Donovan

Four dignitaries at luncheon in honor of the late Maj. Gen. William J. Donovan. From left, Allen Dulles, head of Central Intelligence Agency; Frank J. Williams, past national commander of Legion of Valor who was on of 15 men present who served under Gen. Donovan in the Mexican border incident; John M. Dittman, president of the Erie County Bar Association; and Walter F. Alt, commander of the Western New York Chapter, Legion of Valor.

Allen Dulles Hails Gen. Donovan: 'He Made Nation More Secure'

Maj. Gen. William J. Donovan—a public figure so vibrant, ingenious and dedicated that a single lifetime was hardly enough to encompass his deeds.

That was the portrait sketched today by Allen W. Dulles, director of the nation's Central Intelligence Agency.

He brought to vivid life the memory of the Buffalo general who fought some of the key engagements of World War I, ran the spectacular Office of Strategic Services during World War II, and spent his final years battling Soviet aggression to a standstill in distant lands.

"Awake People to Need"
Addressing more than 600 persons at a civic luncheon in Hotel Lafayette, Mr. Dulles said of the late Gen. Donovan:

"The heritage of Bill Donovan is written in the national security. He awoke the American people to the need of a permanent peace time intelligence service."

"He bestirred Washington into creating a mechanism (the CIA) whereby all of the components of the Government which rely on anywhere in the world pool their knowledge, share their interpretations and together make one unified estimate of what it means."

"He helped place intelligence in its proper perspective and stimulated the policy makers to recognize its role in determining American policy abroad. He was one of the architects of an organization that should keep our government the best informed of any in the world."

Sponsored by Bar
History of Bill Donovan of Buffalo, N. Y., will be: He made his nation more secure."

The luncheon tribute to Gen. Donovan, who died Feb. 8 in Washington's Walter Reed Army Medical Center, was sponsored by the Erie County Bar Association. John H. Dittman, association president, presided.

[Radio Station WBNB recorded Mr. Dulles' address for re-broadcast from 9:05 to 10 PM.]

In keeping with his policy of declining public comment on world affairs, Mr. Dulles kept close to his theme—Gen. Donovan's life of leadership "and his vast interest in the unthought-of, the novel and the dangerous."

Recalls V-2 Rockets

Only at two points did Mr. Dulles—brother of the former secretary of state—insert comments which might have bearing on the present state of the world.

Describing his arrival in London with Gen. Donovan in September 1944, when the Nazi V-2 rockets began falling on England, Mr. Dulles said:

"Both the American and the British intelligence services had been closely following the development of this missile.

"I have often wondered why in this country, our technicians as I believe the Soviet did, and draw earlier the real implications of the success of the V-2, to realize, much earlier in the game, that the combination of the ballistic missile and the atomic bomb, which then was about to be unveiled, could change the nature of war and the security position of this country."

Saw Red Menace Early

At the other point, describing maneuvering in 1947 to have the new CIA made a subordinate part one of the regular Government departments, Mr. Dulles said with restraint: "I have always felt that the decision to place the CIA under the President, as recommended by Gen. Donovan, was wise and necessary."

Mr. Dulles described Gen. Donovan as one of the first to recognize the incipient Soviet menace.

"In late 1944," he related, "I sent a man to Cairo to take over the direction of activities at that post and gave him oral instructions to the effect that the main target for intelligence operations should now become discovering what the Soviets were doing in the Balkans rather than German activities in the Middle East."

Quotes from 1948 Article

"The German threat was receding. The Soviet danger was already looming. He realized this but, for obvious reasons, he could not put such instructions in an official dispatch."

Concerning Gen. Donovan's activities after World War II, Mr. Dulles noted that "the more Gen. Donovan saw of the Soviets in action, the more concerned he was with alerting the American people to the dangers."

He quoted from an article published in the Yale Law Journal in 1948, with Gen. Donovan as co-author:

"The Communist Fifth Column . . . seeks to identify itself with every social grievance. Russian espionage and subversive operations are made up of trained and skilled spy technicians and intelligence officers, propaganda specialists, experts in spreading rumors."

Envoy to Thailand

Soon after, Mr. Dulles observed, Gen. Donovan could restrain himself no longer and took up active warfare again against "station's enemies—this time in the diplomatic field."

"In 1953 the President named this remarkable man of 70 to be United States ambassador to Thailand. At the time, this ancient kingdom of Siam was a main target for Communist subversion."

"With a vigor that belied his years, Bill Donovan threw himself into assisting the Thais in bolstering their defenses against the Communists so that this key stone of anti-communism in Southeast Asia could continue free."

"Upon his return to the United States, one might have expected him to seek retirement, but not from his mind. He became national chairman of the International Refugee Committee and the director of that group's fight against the Soviet program to induce Russians who escaped from communism to return home."

Was Football Hero

"At the time of the Hungarian Revolution, he threw his energies into aiding the refugees who were forced to flee after their unsuccessful effort to win freedom from Soviet tyranny."

Mr. Dulles, who was hand-picked by Gen. Donovan to run the OSS office in Switzerland during World War II, said the general was a man who "wanted to see things on the spot and judge for himself."

"He was constantly on the move and drove his staff wild trying to keep him from going to places they thought too exposed. He also kept them in a state of near exhaustion trying to keep up with the pace he set himself."

Pointing out that Gen. Donovan had been a star quarterback back in 1905 on the Columbia University football team, Mr. Dulles said that in later years "he often commented on his football experience as having aided him in top physical conditioning in a pattern which he inspired in others."

Visited Ethiopia

A colonel during World War I, the Buffalo lawyer-turned-soldier was the nation's three highest decorations—the Distinguished Service Cross, the last of which he received in 1918.

Mr. Dulles quoted Gen. Donovan as saying: "No man status of the latter action: 'I have never deserved it more.'"

Although an assistant U. S. attorney general and then a corporate lawyer during the interval between the two world wars, Gen. Donovan "never lost his interest in world affairs. He took time off to visit Ethiopia during the Italian invasion of that country in 1935. He was in Spain during the civil war, carefully observing the Axis efforts to test their new equipment in these foreign adventures."

Under his direction, the OSS during World War II knew just what to look for. Mr. Dulles called the roll of Nazi secrets uncovered: Jet aircraft plans, the V-1 and V-2, "German work with heavy water in an effort to develop a nuclear weapon."

Qualities of "Ideal Soldier"

He said no idea was too bizarre for Gen. Donovan's consideration. Mr. Dulles recounted an associate's woes in weeks of testing ways to strap delayed-action incendiary bombs to bats, which would be dropped over Japan to nest in buildings.

"Last Thursday I read these pages to one of the most distinguished leaders of the bar and a former president of your association, John Lord O'Brien," Mr. Dulles reported.

"John remarked that several years ago Gen. Frank McCoy described his close association with Bill Donovan during World War I. Gen. McCoy said that Donovan was one of the finest soldiers he ever saw in his life. The long service in the Army, that he had the qualities of the ideal soldier, judgment and courage, and the respect and affection of his men."

Buses to Be Detoured

Donovan Declared One Of First to Warn of Reds

The late Maj. Gen. William J. Donovan yesterday was credited with being one of the first men to recognize the Soviet threat to world peace.

Giving credit to the general for spotting this threat at a time when the western world hailed the Soviets as World War II Allies was Allen W. Dulles, director of the Central Intelligence Agency. He spoke at a memorial luncheon for the general in Hotel Lafayette.

Attending the luncheon were more than 600 persons representing the Erie County Bar Assn., luncheon sponsors; members of Troop I Post, American Legion, which the general helped found, and the Western New York Chapter of the Legion of Valor whose members are composed of holders of the nation's highest military awards.

Gen. Donovan, known as

Allen W. Dulles

"Wild Bill," died in Washington, D. C., Feb. 8 at 76.

Dulles is a brother of former Secretary of State John Foster Dulles.

Referring to September 1944 when the Germans first launched their V2 missiles on London and the implications this held for future warfare, Dulles said few men of his time were more alert to the new threats that might develop.

"In late 1944," the CIA chief said, "he sent a man to Cairo to take over the direction of activities at that post and gave him oral instructions to the effect that the main target for intelligence operations should now become discovering what the Soviets were doing in the Balkans rather than what the Germans were doing in the Middle East."

"The German threat was receding. The Soviet danger was already looming. He realized this but, for obvious reasons, he could not put such instructions in an official dispatch."

Reviewing the fabulous career of the Buffalo-born soldier, statesman, spy chief and lawyer, Dulles gave him credit for the basic organization of a U.S. spy system for peacetime which he had attempted to set up as early as 1944.

Dulles stressed the military career of Donovan, starting with his distinguished record as a member of the 165th Infantry of the 42nd Division in World War I.

He won the nation's three highest military awards—the Congressional Medal of Honor, the Distinguished Service Medal and the Distinguished Service Cross—in that conflict.

Gen. Donovan received those medals for the type of action that amounts to performance "above and beyond the call of duty." It included personal leadership of his troops under heavy enemy fire with complete disdain for the danger involved.

Some of the more fabulous exploits of Gen. Donovan's World War II Office of Strategic Services were recounted. Others will have to remain a secret forever, Dulles said.

According to Dulles, the O.S.S. obtained information of great military value from agents with contacts in Berlin, in the German high command and the Abwehr, the German Secret Service.

"Information was gathered about German jets which were to make their appearance toward the end of the war, German nuclear experiments with heavy water, and about the V1s and the V2s."

Dulles said the most successful spy placement accomplished by the O.S.S. was the installation of one in the office of Foreign Minister Joachim von Ribbentrop.
